

The Wikileaks Revelations, part III:

As Interpol deepens its investigation into Mr. Assange's use of birth control and financial service companies feel the wrath of script-kiddies worldwide, our own crew of Internet vigilantes sifts through the remains of the Wikileaks data-dump in search of all the hot China-related news and gossip the American government does not want you to know.

This week: join Kaiser Kuo, Jeremy Goldkorn and Will Moss as Sinica considers the evidence linking the recent spate of Google attacks to the head of the CCP Propaganda Department, and takes a hard, close look at Xi Jinping's taste in American cinema. Xi Jinping is the presumed front-runner to replace Hu Jintao as Party Secretary in 2012, and his favorite Spielberg film is a genuine shocker. Also: recent developments in the Nobel Prize drama and yet another controversial Chinese alternative.

As always, if you are new to Sinica you may want to consider subscribing by RSS to get every show automatically downloaded to your computer and MP3 player. To automate this tiring process, simply sign up for an account here at Popup Chinese, and configure your show subscriptions on the invite page. That said, if you're more in the mood to listen to this podcast on the go, you're also welcome to download the show as a standalone mp3 file. Enjoy!