

China and India:

Asia's rising colossi share a great deal besides rich cultures, great culinary traditions, billion-plus populations and a long border. But relations haven't always been smooth. Have a recent round of border talks, followed up by Premier Wen Jiabao's recent visit to New Delhi, given a new direction to Sino-Indian relations? And how has U.S. President Barack Obama's recent visit to India been perceived in New Delhi and Beijing?

On Sinica this week, Kaiser Kuo leads Stephanie Kleine-Ahlbrandt of the International Crisis Group, reporter Kathleen McLaughlin from the Bureau of National Affairs, and The Hindu's China correspondent Ananth Krishnan in a discussion into the state of relations between India and China. Join us for an insider podcast that goes beyond the news, into the sort of underlying analysis you won't find anywhere else. So join us as Kaiser and crew talk about the state of security and trade on the subcontinent, and the implications of Chinese and Indian positioning for American policy in the region.

Care to be notified when a new episode of Sinica is released? For a more convenient way to listen, subscribe by RSS by creating an account on Popup Chinese and picking the Sinica show in your list of preferred podcasts. Then follow our instructions and get Sinica delivered fresh to you every time it is released. Those seeking less commitment are of course still invited to download this standalone mp3 directly from our site. Enjoy!